To secure a bright and steady fiame every lamp should be kept well cleaned. The boiling of the burner in a strong solution of washing soda is necessary once a month, and all corroded spots must be scraped away as well with a sharp knife and afterwards smoothed down with knife brick. A careful cleansing of the oil bowl will correct the disagreeable odor so often perceived, while for absolute perfection the wick must often be.

A wick still long enough to burn may be sweetened by soaking it in strong vinegar, with an afterwash with soap and water and sun drying. Soap suds and sunshine are always magnificent purifiers. A cracked lamp chimney always makes a lamp smoke to some extent, and upon the quality of the oil used and the length of time it has been in the house much depends. Cheap and old oil has always a disagreeable odor, and kerosene which has been left standmust often be renewed. and kerosene which has been left stand-ing a Winter in the cellar or in an un-There is a great big brewe used lamp is always dangerous, for then the explosive quality is paramount. timore which has gone to the pains of the explosive quality is paramount. the explosive quality is paramount.

Tables and marble washstands often become stained, and unless these are carefully removed the marble is apt to lose its polish during the process. An authority gives the following as best method: Mix together a teaffoorful of strong soapsuds, the same mount of oxgall and half a wine lassful of turpentine. Add sufficient aller's earth to form a stiff paste and apply to the marble with a brush. The mixture should be allowed to remain for two or three days, then be wiped off.

A Day at Home.

After the meeting had adjourned, the President returned to the living apartments of the White House to meet his son Robert, who was a Cap-tain on Gen. Grant's staff, and had itors. An exception was made, how-ever, in the case of Schuyler Colfax peaker of the House of Ropresenta-ives. Colfax was about to start on an Speaker of the House of Representatives. Colfax was about to start on an overland trip to California, and came to inquire if the President contemplated calling an extra session. Mr. Lincoln assured him that he did not, and gave him some messages to convey to the miners of Colorado and California, who had been so loyal to the Government during its greatest stress. In the afternoon the President went for a long drive with Mrs. Lincoln, and to all who met him he seemed much of the peace which had come after the four years of terrible war, and said he looked forward to carrying on his work of restoring the country until the end of his term, when he expected to go back to illinois and his law practice.

The Threats and Projects of Assassination.

Altho from the very day of President Lincoln's election his friends had been anxious about his personal safety, Lincoln-himself never seemed at all so. Despite the fact that his murder was openly preached in the South as an act as praiseworthy as that of either of the Brutuses, and that the South as an act as praiseworthy as that of either of the Brutuses, and that the South as an act as praiseworthy as that of either of the Brutuses, and that the South as an act as praiseworthy as that of either of the Brutuses, and that the south warmed with men eager for the reputation of being killers, Lincoln how few precautions for his safety and was applicable. There were few communities in the South and West which did not have some village bully who swaggered about his desire and intention to kill the "nigger-loving Aboli-" and the state of th did not have some village bully who swaggered about his desire and intention to kill the "nigger-loving Aboli-tionist." There had been advertise-ments in the Southern papers to raise a fund for anyone who should assasinate Lincoln and members of his Cabi-net, and in the Confederate archives, after the war, was found a letter from a Lieut. Aiston, who wrote to Jefferson Davis offering to "rid the country of bavis offering to "rid the country of some of her deadliest enemies by strik-ing at the very hearts blood of those who seek to enchain her in slavery." On the back of this letter was ref-erence by Mr. Davis to his Secretary of War, who sent it to the Confederate Adjutant-General indorsed "for atten-tion." When Mr. Lincoln was remonstrated with on account of the freedom with which he exposed himself to the danger of assassination, he said that it was necessary for him to meet constantly all manner of people, friends and strangers, that he must take this risk, and that he could not guard himself unless he were to actually shut himself up in an iron box, which, he quaintly remarked, would hamper the performance of his duties as President. After all, he could die but once, and if he went around in constant fear of death he would die daily.

Having passed safetly thru all these threats then for four years the people began to disregard them, as did even those immediately around the Presi-So far as was known, none the rabid boasters had ever pushed their malevolence far enough to actually en-danger the President's life. THE ONLY AUTHORIZED OFFICIAL VERSION

War Department Design Reproduced on Handsome Postal Card A Beautiful Patriotic Souvenir Artistically Executed

In response to a request by the Grand Army of the Republic, Congress has enacted that Lincoln's Immortal Gettysburg Address shall be placed on conspicuous tablets in every National Military Park and National Cemetery. The War Department has prepared the design for this tablet. It is exceed ingly beautiful, simple and effective.

THE NATIONAL TRIBUNE has had the opportunity of being the first to reproduce this, and it now offers it in a handsome and artistically executed Postal Card, which will be welcomed by patriotic people everywhere.

It is the only absolutely correct version of the inspired words, which will be read with swelling hearts as long as the language is spoken. Other versions are marred by more or less trifling variations and errors which detract from the simple majesty of Lincoln's words. The text given is the result of long study and comparison of the various versions.
